Will momentum of global economy recover strongly enough to prompt Fed rate hike?

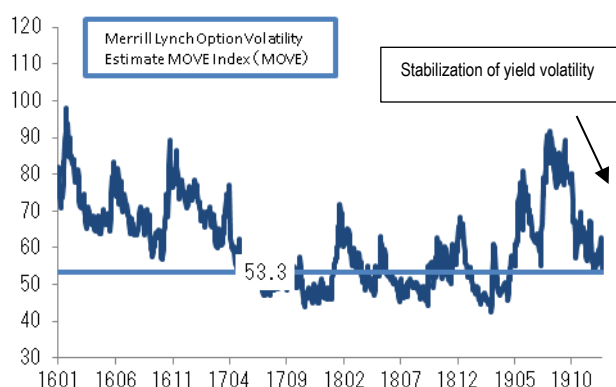

Things to watch for in 2020: Part 6

According to our senior adviser, Tadao Sakashima, the US jobs report acts as more than just a statistic and has special power to change market trends, as US consumption is so vast. In the long term, the market moves in line with the jobs report in many cases.

At the end of last week, it was announced that December US jobs report undershot the market estimate, suggesting the “prolongation of the Goldilocks market.” I can also say that the data would serve as a “water sprinkler” for an overheating stock market and as a “stabilizer” for the bond market. That said, the details of the report do not warrant pessimism. In the current environment where the unemployment rate hit a 50-year low, it would be fair to view the 145K job gains as solid.

As we pointed out in our 9 January report \(Things to watch for in 2020: Part 4\), a major focal point in the global bond market is whether the Phillips curve will revive. In that respect, the slowdown in the wage-hike rate in the latest jobs report (+0.1% m/m, +2.9% y/y) denied such a revival. As this lowered the possibility that the Fed’s rate-hike precondition “significant and persistent inflation” will be met, “low for long” and a decline in volatility are expected. This would further solidify the grounds of the “Goldilocks market endorsed by the Fed.” In addition, it would serve as a factor to prevent a rise in superlong JGB yields (i.e., 10-year forward 10-year yield and 20-year forward 10-year yield) highly correlated with US yields.

In the short term, this is OK. However, from a long-term viewpoint, it is more likely that the market will have larger problems in the future. If the US cannot achieve economic growth strong enough to overheat wages and inflation, the Fed cannot hike rates. This would eventually raise the risk that the next recession (peaking-out of cycle) will happen with little room for rate cuts.

With concerns receding, the financial condition is stimulating the economy partly on the dovish stance at global central banks, such as the Fed. The global economy is thus expected to maintain a moderate recovery toward spring. While this improvement in the global manufacturing cycle has globally created a sense of bottoming-out of yields, catalysts for a strong recovery of the global economic momentum are lacking, as witnessed by the limited rebound of prices of commodities such as industrial metals.

If the Fed enters the next rate cut cycle without hiking rates, it will be more likely to embark on unconventional methods that have been under discussion to review its policy framework, such as quantitative easing, yield curve control, and of course a cut of the federal funds rate to the effective lower bound. As this issue is an important focal point in 2020, we will examine it in a different report. In this context, however, whether global economic momentum will recover strongly enough to prompt a rate hike, while a bottoming-out is currently observed, is an important focal point in 2020.

Explanatory Document of Unregistered Credit Ratings

In order to ensure the fairness and transparency in the markets, Credit Rating Agencies became subject to the Credit Rating Agencies' registration system based on the Financial Instruments and Exchange Act. In accordance with this Act, in soliciting customers, Financial Instruments Business Operators, etc. shall not use the credit ratings provided by unregistered Credit Rating Agencies without informing customers of the fact that those Credit Rating Agencies are not registered, and shall also inform customers of the significance and limitations of credit ratings, etc.

■ The Significance of Registration

Registered Credit Rating Agencies are subject to the following regulations:

- 1) Duty of good faith.
- 2) Establishment of control systems (fairness of the rating process, and prevention of conflicts of interest, etc.).
- 3) Prohibition of the ratings in cases where Credit Rating Agencies have a close relationship with the issuers of the financial instruments to be rated, etc.
- 4) Duty to disclose information (preparation and publication of rating policies, etc. and public disclosure of explanatory documents).

In addition to the above, Registered Credit Rating Agencies are subject to the supervision of the Financial Services Agency ("FSA"), and as such may be ordered to produce reports, be subject to on-site inspection, and be ordered to improve business operations, whereas unregistered Credit Rating Agencies are free from such regulations and supervision.

Assumptions, Significance and Limitations of Credit Ratings

Credit ratings assigned by Standard & Poor's are statements of opinion on the future credit quality of specific issuers or issues as of the date they are expressed and they are not indexes which show the probability of the occurrence of the failure to pay by the issuer or a specific debt and do not guarantee creditworthiness. Credit ratings are not a recommendation to purchase, sell or hold any securities, or a statement of market liquidity or prices in the secondary market of any issues.

Credit ratings may change depending on various factors, including issuers' performance, changes in external environment, performance of underlying assets, creditworthiness of counterparties and others. Standard & Poor's conducts rating analysis based on information it believes to be provided by the reliable source and assigns credit ratings only when it believes there is enough information in terms of quality and quantity to make a conclusion. However, Standard & Poor's does not perform an audit, due diligence or independent verification of any information it receives from the issuer or a third party, or guarantee its accuracy, completeness or timeliness of the results by using the information. Moreover, it needs to be noted that it may incur a potential risk due to the limitation of the historical data that are available for use depending on the rating.

How to acquire information related to an outline of the rating policies and methods adopted by the person who determines Credit Ratings

The information is posted under "Unregistered Rating explanation" in the section on "The use of Ratings of Unregistered Agencies" on the website of Moody's Japan K.K. (The website can be viewed after clicking on "Credit Rating Business" on the Japanese version of Moody's website (https://www.moody.com/pages/default_ja.aspx))

Assumptions, Significance and Limitations of Credit Ratings

Credit ratings are Moody's Investors Service's ("MIS") current opinions of the relative future credit risk of entities, credit commitments, or debt or debt-like securities. MIS defines credit risk as the risk that an entity may not meet its contractual, financial obligations as they come due and any estimated financial loss in the event of default. Credit ratings do not address any other risk, including but not limited to: liquidity risk, market value risk, or price volatility. Credit ratings do not constitute investment or financial advice, and credit ratings are not recommendations to purchase, sell, or hold particular securities. No warranty, express or implied, as to the accuracy, timeliness, completeness, merchantability or fitness for any particular purpose of any such rating or other opinion or information, is given or made by MIS in any form or manner whatsoever.

Based on the information received from issuers or from public sources, the credit risks of the issuers or obligations are assessed. MIS adopts all necessary measures so that the information it uses in assigning a credit rating is of sufficient quality and from sources MIS considers to be reliable. However, MIS is not an auditor and cannot in every instance independently verify or validate information received in the rating process.

The name and registration number of the Registered Credit Rating Agency in the group: Fitch Ratings Japan Limited (FSA commissioner (Rating) No.7)

How to acquire information related to an outline of the rating policies and methods adopted by the person who determines Credit Ratings

The information is posted under "Outline of Rating Policies" in the section of "Regulatory Affairs" on the website of Fitch Ratings Japan Limited (<https://www.fitchratings.co.jp/web/>)

Assumptions, Significance and Limitations of Credit Ratings

Ratings assigned by Fitch are opinions based on established criteria and methodologies. Ratings are not facts, and therefore cannot be described as being "accurate" or "inaccurate". Credit ratings do not directly address any risk other than credit risk. Credit ratings do not comment on the adequacy of market price or market liquidity for rated instruments. Ratings are relative measures of risk; as a result, the assignment of ratings in the same category to entities and obligations may not fully reflect small differences in the degrees of risk. Credit ratings, as opinions on relative ranking of vulnerability to default, do not imply or convey a specific statistical probability of default.

In issuing and maintaining its ratings, Fitch relies on factual information it receives from issuers and underwriters and from other sources Fitch believes to be credible. Fitch conducts a reasonable investigation of the factual information relied upon by it in accordance with its ratings methodology, and obtains reasonable verification of that information from independent sources, to the extent such sources are available for a given security or in a given jurisdiction. The assignment of a rating to any issuer or any security should not be viewed as a guarantee of the accuracy, completeness, or timeliness of the information relied on in connection with the rating or the results obtained from the use of such information. If any such information should turn out to contain misrepresentations or to be otherwise misleading, the rating associated with that information may not be appropriate. Despite any verification of current facts, ratings can be affected by future events or conditions that were not anticipated at the time a rating was issued or affirmed.

For the details of assumption, purpose and restriction of credit ratings, please refer to "Definitions of ratings and other forms of opinion" on the website of Fitch Rating Japan Limited.
