Good profit-taking opportunity for Japanese investors

Yield declines were led by overseas investors, as expected

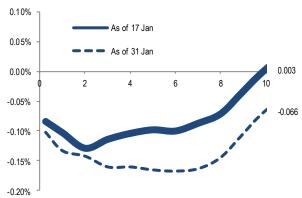

According to data released yesterday for International Transactions in Securities (weekly; based on reports from designated major investors), acquisition of long-term debt securities by non-residents exceeded disposition by Y1,023.7bn during 26 January-1 February. The figure topped the Y1tn level for the first time since the week of 8 - 14 September 2019. During this period, the short-term/intermediate zone of the JGB yield curve was partially inverted due to the plunge in yields in the intermediate/long-term zone. As expected, the data verified that the factor behind the recent substantial yield declines in the intermediate/long-term zone was "purchases by overseas investors."

Chart: JGB Yield Curve

These purchases by foreign investors are justified in terms of the relative value. For example, the dollar-denominated 5-year CDS spread for Japan is around 17bp. When overlaying this on 5-year US Treasuries, quasi dollar-denominated 5-year JGBs yield "US Treasuries + 17bp." Meanwhile, when the 5-year JGB yield and currency hedge cost are unchanged in the JGB market, a constant value for dollar-denominated JGBs is "the absolute yield," instead of the spread.

In this case, if the short-term/intermediate zone of the US yield curve starts to invert due to a decline in the 5-year US Treasury yield reflecting rate cut expectations, this will widen the yield difference between US Treasuries and dollar-denominated JGBs, as the latter is a constant value. This makes dollar-denominated JGBs attractive for overseas investors. As a result, JGBs attract purchases from overseas investors eyeing the excessive undervaluation of the spread, putting downward pressure on JGB yields. This is probably what was behind the simultaneous emergence of the yield curve inversion in Japan and abroad.

That said, if the BOJ's policy stance does not match with this new JGB yield level led by overseas investors focusing on the attractive spread, it will provide a good profit-taking opportunity for Japanese investors.

Either way, it is definitely becoming increasingly necessary to keep an eye on the perspective of overseas investors in the JGB market where cross-border investment is active. As long as the US Treasury yield curve is stable, currency hedge cost is a major fluctuation factor for JGB spread against US Treasuries. However, in the case of a change in the shape of the US Treasury yield curve, which is the basis for measuring the spread, the latter also becomes an important factor.

Investors pay no notice to assets that are overvalued, regardless of their type. However, once assets become undervalued, investors are apt to increase purchases. The price movement over the past two weeks presented an opportunity to reconfirm the need to view JGBs as risk assets (in terms of spread vs. US Treasuries), rather than as safe assets.

Explanatory Document of Unregistered Credit Ratings

In order to ensure the fairness and transparency in the markets, Credit Rating Agencies became subject to the Credit Rating Agencies' registration system based on the Financial Instruments and Exchange Act. In accordance with this Act, in soliciting customers, Financial Instruments Business Operators, etc. shall not use the credit ratings provided by unregistered Credit Rating Agencies without informing customers of the fact that those Credit Rating Agencies are not registered, and shall also inform customers of the significance and limitations of credit ratings, etc.

■ The Significance of Registration

Registered Credit Rating Agencies are subject to the following regulations:

- 1) Duty of good faith.
- 2) Establishment of control systems (fairness of the rating process, and prevention of conflicts of interest, etc.).
- 3) Prohibition of the ratings in cases where Credit Rating Agencies have a close relationship with the issuers of the financial instruments to be rated, etc.
- 4) Duty to disclose information (preparation and publication of rating policies, etc. and public disclosure of explanatory documents).

In addition to the above, Registered Credit Rating Agencies are subject to the supervision of the Financial Services Agency ("FSA"), and as such may be ordered to produce reports, be subject to on-site inspection, and be ordered to improve business operations, whereas unregistered Credit Rating Agencies are free from such regulations and supervision.

Assumptions, Significance and Limitations of Credit Ratings

Credit ratings assigned by Standard & Poor's are statements of opinion on the future credit quality of specific issuers or issues as of the date they are expressed and they are not indexes which show the probability of the occurrence of the failure to pay by the issuer or a specific debt and do not guarantee creditworthiness. Credit ratings are not a recommendation to purchase, sell or hold any securities, or a statement of market liquidity or prices in the secondary market of any issues.

Credit ratings may change depending on various factors, including issuers' performance, changes in external environment, performance of underlying assets, creditworthiness of counterparties and others. Standard & Poor's conducts rating analysis based on information it believes to be provided by the reliable source and assigns credit ratings only when it believes there is enough information in terms of quality and quantity to make a conclusion. However, Standard & Poor's does not perform an audit, due diligence or independent verification of any information it receives from the issuer or a third party, or guarantee its accuracy, completeness or timeliness of the results by using the information. Moreover, it needs to be noted that it may incur a potential risk due to the limitation of the historical data that are available for use depending on the rating.

Assumptions, Significance and Limitations of Credit Ratings

Credit ratings are Moody's Investors Service's ("MIS") current opinions of the relative future credit risk of entities, credit commitments, or debt or debt-like securities. MIS defines credit risk as the risk that an entity may not meet its contractual, financial obligations as they come due and any estimated financial loss in the event of default. Credit ratings do not address any other risk, including but not limited to: liquidity risk, market value risk, or price volatility. Credit ratings do not constitute investment or financial advice, and credit ratings are not recommendations to purchase, sell, or hold particular securities. No warranty, express or implied, as to the accuracy, timeliness, completeness, merchantability or fitness for any particular purpose of any such rating or other opinion or information, is given or made by MIS in

Based on the information received from issuers or from public sources, the credit risks of the issuers or obligations are assessed. MIS adopts all necessary measures so that the information it uses in assigning a credit rating is of sufficient quality and from sources MIS considers to be reliable. However, MIS is not an auditor and cannot in every instance independently verify or validate information received in the rating process.

How to acquire information related to an outline of the rating policies and methods adopted by the person who determines Credit Ratings

The information is posted under "Outline of Rating Policies" in the section of "Regulatory Affairs" on the website of Fitch Ratings Japan Limited (https://www.fitchratings.co.jp/web/)

Assumptions, Significance and Limitations of Credit Ratings

Ratings assigned by Fitch are opinions based on established criteria and methodologies. Ratings are not facts, and therefore cannot be described as being "accurate" or "inaccurate". Credit ratings do not directly address any risk other than credit risk. Credit ratings do not comment on the adequacy of market price or market liquidity for rated instruments. Ratings are relative measures of risk; as a result, the assignment of ratings in the same category to entities and obligations may not fully reflect small differences in the degrees of risk. Credit ratings, as opinions on relative ranking of vulnerability to default, do not imply or convey a specific statistical probability of default.

In issuing and maintaining its ratings, Fitch relies on factual information it receives from issuers and underwriters and from other sources Fitch believes to be credible. Fitch conducts a reasonable investigation of the factual information relied upon by it in accordance with its ratings methodology, and obtains reasonable verification of that information from independent sources, to the extent such sources are available for a given security or in a given jurisdiction. The assignment of a rating to any issuer or any security should not be viewed as a guarantee of the accuracy, completeness, or timeliness of the information relied on in connection with the rating or the results obtained from the use of such information. If any such information should turn out to contain misrepresentations or to be otherwise misleading, the rating associated with that information may not be appropriate. Despite any verification of current facts, ratings can be affected by future events or conditions that were not anticipated at the time a rating was issued or affirmed.
