Deeper conviction of a comeback of Goldilocks market

Change in market trends

Yesterday, the DJIA surged by 912 points and the US long-term interest rate rose by around 8bp (30-year yield up 12bp) due to a stronger risk appetite. Last night's risk-on activities were observed amid a decline in the VIX Index to the 20 level, indicating the firmness of the market. An experimental COVID-19 vaccine reportedly showed favorable results, and France and Germany reached an agreement about a 500bn euro Recovery Fund from the pandemic. However, I think the extent of yesterday's advance was somewhat large in comparison with such factors.

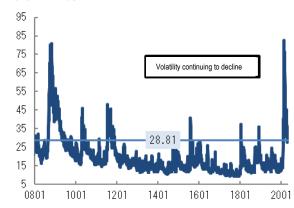

I sense a change in market trends here. This is because the recent drop in the market has not been very deep against big factors that should be regarded as more pessimistic<sup>1</sup>. On the other hand, the market tends to rebound substantially, reflecting small positive factors. This is a phenomenon that is often seen in the final phase of a bear market. This phase may be coming now.

When trying to judge if an actual change in market trends has occurred, it is helpful to check if last night's large price range was caused by news during the night or if investors' risk-averse positions that have accumulated during the bear market are heading towards unwinding. In the latter case, the market is expected to advance significantly against small positive factors, which is a signal of a change in market trends.

For risk-averse positions, the appropriate reaction to negative factors is generally profittaking<sup>2</sup>. And, if many market participants are leaning towards risk-averse positions across the board, profit-taking tends to occur against negative factors, which curbs a decline in the market in comparison with such factors. On the other hand, investors tend to be sensitive in their response to positive factors. This phenomenon is apt to be disregarded as cherry picking by the market, but that is a superficial interpretation. A more basic cause is distorted positioning.

If risk-averse positions continue to perform poorly for a long time despite the emergence of negative factors, fears emerge that risk-off will not last and that there will be a lack of negative factors. This prompts the unwinding of accumulated risk-averse positions and leads to a change in market trends. Signs of a comeback of the Goldilocks market, which were pointed out in our 8 May report, might have been real. While I, of course, am not saying that the market will never decline going forward, I do feel that the risk of waiting too long is growing bigger.

Explanatory Document of Unregistered Credit Ratings

In order to ensure the fairness and transparency in the markets, Credit Rating Agencies became subject to the Credit Rating Agencies' registration system based on the Financial Instruments and Exchange Act. In accordance with this Act, in soliciting customers, Financial Instruments Business Operators, etc. shall not use the credit ratings provided by unregistered Credit Rating Agencies without informing customers of the fact that those Credit Rating Agencies are not registered, and shall also inform customers of the significance and limitations of credit ratings, etc.

■ The Significance of Registration

Registered Credit Rating Agencies are subject to the following regulations:

- 1) Duty of good faith.
- 2) Establishment of control systems (fairness of the rating process, and prevention of conflicts of interest, etc.).
- 3) Prohibition of the ratings in cases where Credit Rating Agencies have a close relationship with the issuers of the financial instruments to be rated, etc.
- 4) Duty to disclose information (preparation and publication of rating policies, etc. and public disclosure of explanatory documents).

In addition to the above, Registered Credit Rating Agencies are subject to the supervision of the Financial Services Agency ("FSA"), and as such may be ordered to produce reports, be subject to on-site inspection, and be ordered to improve business operations, whereas unregistered Credit Rating Agencies are free from such regulations and supervision.

Assumptions, Significance and Limitations of Credit Ratings

Credit ratings assigned by Standard & Poor's are statements of opinion on the future credit quality of specific issuers or issues as of the date they are expressed and they are not indexes which show the probability of the occurrence of the failure to pay by the issuer or a specific debt and do not guarantee creditworthiness. Credit ratings are not a recommendation to purchase, sell or hold any securities, or a statement of market liquidity or prices in the secondary market of any issues.

Credit ratings may change depending on various factors, including issuers' performance, changes in external environment, performance of underlying assets, creditworthiness of counterparties and others. Standard & Poor's conducts rating analysis based on information it believes to be provided by the reliable source and assigns credit ratings only when it believes there is enough information in terms of quality and quantity to make a conclusion. However, Standard & Poor's does not perform an audit, due diligence or independent verification of any information it receives from the issuer or a third party, or guarantee its accuracy, completeness or timeliness of the results by using the information. Moreover, it needs to be noted that it may incur a potential risk due to the limitation of the historical data that are available for use depending on the rating.

Assumptions, Significance and Limitations of Credit Ratings

Credit ratings are Moody's Investors Service's ("MIS") current opinions of the relative future credit risk of entities, credit commitments, or debt or debt-like securities. MIS defines credit risk as the risk that an entity may not meet its contractual, financial obligations as they come due and any estimated financial loss in the event of default. Credit ratings do not address any other risk, including but not limited to: liquidity risk, market value risk, or price volatility. Credit ratings do not constitute investment or financial advice, and credit ratings are not recommendations to purchase, sell, or hold particular securities. No warranty, express or implied, as to the accuracy, timeliness, completeness, merchantability or fitness for any particular purpose of any such rating or other opinion or information, is given or made by MIS in

Based on the information received from issuers or from public sources, the credit risks of the issuers or obligations are assessed. MIS adopts all necessary measures so that the information it uses in assigning a credit rating is of sufficient quality and from sources MIS considers to be reliable. However, MIS is not an auditor and cannot in every instance independently verify or validate information received in the rating process.

Assumptions, Significance and Limitations of Credit Ratings

Ratings assigned by Fitch are opinions based on established criteria and methodologies. Ratings are not facts, and therefore cannot be described as being "accurate" or "inaccurate" Credit ratings do not directly address any risk other than credit risk. Credit ratings do not comment on the adequacy of market price or market liquidity for rated instruments. Ratings are relative measures of risk; as a result, the assignment of ratings in the same category to entities and obligations may not fully reflect small differences in the degrees of risk. Credit ratings, as opinions on relative ranking of vulnerability to default, do not imply or convey a specific statistical probability of

In issuing and maintaining its ratings, Fitch relies on factual information it receives from issuers and underwriters and from other sources Fitch believes to be credible. Fitch conducts a reasonable investigation of the factual information relied upon by it in accordance with its ratings methodology, and obtains reasonable verification of that information from independent sources, to the extent such sources are available for a given security or in a given jurisdiction. The assignment of a rating to any issuer or any security should not be viewed as a guarantee of the accuracy, completeness, or timeliness of the information relied on in connection with the rating or the results obtained from the use of such information. If any such information should turn out to contain misrepresentations or to be otherwise misleading, the rating associated with that information may not be appropriate. Despite any verification of current facts, ratings can be affected by future events or conditions that were not anticipated at the time a rating was issued or affirmed.
